Wireframe

This is where the design of the web site begins, after a thorough conceptualization, before creating the actual web pages, the program flow must be first established and understood.

The wireframe provide the blueprint-like structure that focuses on content, functionality and user-experience (UX) rather than aesthetics.

In short, will be our guide in developing a web site.

Modified Version

- Implement a header and footer

“The web pages are modified by putting a standard navigational header where the links for the Home, Product and About Page will be placed to make it available and accessible to all web pages. In addition, a footer is also added and this will be available to all web pages as well.”
